Study Groups offer an opportunity for members to explore a specific topic as part of an interactive, member-proposed and facilitated conversation. Study Groups are typically smaller than courses and meet for 4-8 sessions, but other models may be tailored to the subject matter and the preferences of the facilitators. Study Groups provide an opportunity for members who seek active participation and exploration in a wide variety of areas.

Facilitator training and information sessions will be organized by the Study Group Committee for the benefit of new and returning facilitators. It is strongly recommended that a member has participated in at least one prior OLLI Study Group before proposing to facilitate a group.

Types of study groups (please check the type that best describes the study group you are proposing):

1) Facilitator leads all sessions.
   - ☐ a. Most study materials are chosen by the facilitator.
   - ☐ b. Group members supplement these materials with their own readings and knowledge.

2) A team of facilitators leads all sessions.
   - ☐ a. Facilitator team chooses most study materials.
   - ☐ b. Group members supplement these materials with their own readings and knowledge.

3) Facilitator asks for participants to lead some sessions.
   - ☐ a. Original discussion materials are chosen by the facilitator.
   - ☐ b. Subsequent volunteer leaders may choose their own materials for individual discussions.
   - ☐ c. Group members supplement these materials with their own readings and knowledge.
